MSHA is seeking to hire more mine inspectors in Alaska Employment screenings will be held April 8 and 9 in Anchorage

ARLINGTON, Va. – The U.S. Department of Labor’s Mine Safety and Health Administration (MSHA) is seeking to hire new federal mine inspectors for positions in Anchorage, Alaska. Applicant screenings for these positions will be held April 8 and 9 at the Anchorage Federal Court Annex. Interested citizens who have not previously registered via MSHA’s Web site are welcome to attend, subject to space availability.

“MSHA is interested in hiring professionals who are willing to help our agency keep U.S. mines safe by preventing accidental injuries and fatalities,” said Richard E. Stickler, acting assistant secretary of labor for mine safety and health. “MSHA needs motivated individuals eager to help us continue to protect our nation’s miners.”

Everyone attending the applicant screening should bring a completed resume and photo identification. Check the MSHA Web site at www.msha.gov to confirm the status of the screenings before traveling to the site.

All applicants will be notified of test results. Selected candidates will participate in a formal two-year training program. Candidates for the GS-9 level should be able to perform arduous duties and can expect a starting annual salary of about $45,000. In addition to a 40-hour work week with generous annual, sick and holiday leave, selected candidates are offered health, life, and long-term care insurance; a stable retirement program, including a tax-deferred savings plan; travel reimbursement; and flexible spending accounts for medical and dental expenses.

The Anchorage Federal Court Annex is located at 222 West 8th Ave., Room A-35 in Anchorage. Registration begins at 7 a.m. and testing will begin at 8 a.m. AKDT.

MSHA is the federal agency charged with inspection of mining operations nationwide for adherence to regulations designed to protect the safety and health of working miners.
