

The Pennsylvania Anthracite Heritage Museum at Scranton is devoted to life and work in northeastern Pennsylvania. There, coal was dominant for more than a century and formed a distinct culture.

The museum's diverse regional collections-highlighting the mines, the canals, the railroads, the mills, the factories, ethnicity and labor-represent all facets of the work, life and values of the region's ethnic communities. Located in McDade Park, the museum is adjacent to the Lackawanna Mine Tour, an underground visitor's excursion.
